

Rosanna Eleanor Leprohon - An Afternoon in July

LibriVox

An Afternoon in July

by Rosanna Eleanor Leprohon (1829-1879)

LibriVox volunteers bring you 14 recordings of An Afternoon in July by Rosanna Eleanor Leprohon. This was the Fortnightly Poetry project for July 7, 2013.

Rosanna Eleanor Leprohon, born Rosanna Eleanor Mullins, was a Canadian writer and poet. She was "one of the first English-Canadian writers to depict French Canada in a way that earned the praise of, and resulted in her novels being read by, both anglophone and francophone Canadians."

Leprohon's novels were popular in both English and French Canada in the late 19th-century, and were still being reprinted in French in the mid-1920s. They gradually went out of fashion in the early 20th-century, as literary styles changed.

"Since 1970, however," says the Dictionary of Literary Biography, "the life and works of Rosanna Eleanor Mullins Leprohon have been frequently noted and increasingly praised by critics and scholars of both English-and French-Canadian literature, and new editions of her works have been published."

14 files, 33:24

Cover design: Bart de Leeuw

Book Coordinator/Meta-Coordinator/Cataloging: David Lawrence

For more information, or to volunteer, please visit: librivox.org.
All LibriVox productions are in the public domain.

Rosanna Eleanor Leprohon - An Afternoon in July